

Q1

Hi Anna,

I hope you're well. I want to buy a small gift for my neighbour because she has been really kind to me since I moved in. She often brings me fruit and helps when I'm busy, so I'd like to say thank you. I'm thinking of getting her a nice box of tea or some hand cream. Could you come shopping with me this Saturday? Let me know!

Your friend,

Emily

(a) Environmentally Friendly Cities

Many cities around the world are trying to become more environmentally friendly, and there are several effective ways to achieve this. One important method is improving public transport. When buses and trains are clean, cheap and reliable, more people are willing to use them instead of driving. This reduces traffic and pollution. Another useful approach is increasing the amount of green space, such as parks, small gardens and tree-lined streets. These areas help clean the air and give people pleasant places to relax.

Living in an environmentally friendly city has many benefits for local people. First, the air is cleaner, which means residents are less likely to suffer from respiratory problems. Secondly, a greener city creates a more attractive environment where people feel happier and less stressed.

For me, living in an environmentally friendly city is extremely important. I spend a lot of time outdoors, so clean air and quiet spaces make my daily life more enjoyable. I also believe that cities should take responsibility for protecting the planet. If every city made small changes, the world would become a much healthier place for future generations.

(b) Using Online Media to Find Jobs

Today, online media has become one of the most common ways for people to look for jobs. The first type of online media many people use is job-search websites. These sites allow users to create profiles, upload their CVs and search for jobs in different locations. Another popular type is social media platforms, where companies often post vacancies and professionals can connect with employers.

There are several benefits to using online media for job hunting. One major advantage is convenience. People can look for work at any time, without needing to visit companies in person. Another benefit is the wide range of opportunities. Online platforms show hundreds of job listings, so applicants can compare roles and choose the ones that suit them best.

For me, online media is extremely important for finding jobs in the future. As a student, I do not have much time to visit companies, so searching online saves me time and effort. It also helps me understand what skills employers want, which motivates me to improve myself. I believe online media will continue to play a key role in job searching for young people like me.

(c) Treating Students Equally

Treating students equally is essential in any school, and it brings several important benefits. Firstly, when students feel they are treated fairly, they become more confident and are more willing to participate in class. This can improve their academic performance. Secondly, equal treatment helps create a positive school atmosphere where students respect one another and feel safe.

However, schools do not always treat students equally. For example, some teachers may give more attention to students who are already high achievers, while weaker students receive less support. Another issue is that certain school activities may only be available to students who can afford extra fees, which creates unfair opportunities.

In my opinion, my school has made good progress in treating students equally, but there is still room for improvement. Teachers try to support all students, but sometimes the difference in attention is obvious. I think the school should provide more free activities and extra lessons to ensure everyone has the same chance to succeed. Overall, equal treatment is vital because every student deserves a fair and respectful learning environment.

The text discusses advantages of both domestic and international holidays.

Staying in one's own country offers convenience and familiarity. Travellers avoid the stress of visas, long flights, or language barriers, making the trip easier to plan and more relaxing. It's also cost-effective — transport and accommodation are usually cheaper, and tourists can support local businesses while discovering hidden attractions close to home. Such trips encourage appreciation of national culture and scenery that many people overlook.

Holidays abroad, however, provide novelty and broader experiences. Exploring new countries exposes travellers to different climates, cuisines, and customs, deepening their understanding of the world. Visiting foreign landmarks or participating in unique festivals brings excitement that domestic trips can rarely match.

Personally, I believe both types of holidays are valuable. When I need peace of mind, I prefer a local escape; when I crave adventure and cultural discovery, I travel abroad. Ultimately, the best choice depends on what kind of experience you seek.
