

Level 1 Answer (Simple, basic, limited development)

One computer game I know is a very popular game that many young people play online. It is fun and exciting, and players try to win by completing different tasks. Many people enjoy it because it helps them relax.

I would not like a job designing or testing computer games because I think it would be boring to sit in front of a computer for a long time, even though it might be interesting.

I think computer games can be used in classrooms to help students learn because they make lessons more enjoyable. However, they should not be used too often because students may not pay attention.

Parents should control how much time children spend playing computer games because playing too much can be bad for their health and studies. Some people think that in the future young people will not play outdoor games. I do not think this will happen because outdoor games are good for exercise and fun.

Level 2 Answer (More complex, clearer opinions, better development)

One computer game that I know well is an online multiplayer game where players complete challenges either alone or in teams. The game is exciting and requires quick thinking and teamwork, which makes it very popular, especially among young people. However, it can also become addictive if players are not careful.

I think working as a computer game designer or tester would be an interesting job because it allows people to be creative and work with technology. Designers create characters and stories, while testers check for problems. However, I personally would not choose this job because it involves long hours using computers.

In my opinion, computer games should be used in the classroom to support learning, especially educational games. They can help students understand difficult topics in a more interesting way. That said, teachers should use them carefully so that students remain focused. I strongly believe that parents should limit the amount of time their children spend playing computer games. Too much gaming can affect children's health, sleep and school performance. Clear rules can help children balance gaming with other activities.

Finally, although some people believe that young people will stop playing outdoor games in the future, I disagree. Even though technology is becoming more advanced, outdoor games are important for physical health and social skills, so I think they will continue to be part of young people's lives.