Sources for use with Section A.

Source 1: From the obituary of Archbishop Desmond Tutu, published in The Times newspaper, 27 December 2021, the day after Tutu's death. The Times was a British newspaper. Here the reporter comments on Tutu's role in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

Between 1995 and 1998, Tutu was chairman of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission that urged South Africans, white and black, to repent of the crimes they had committed during the apartheid era. He described the job as the hardest of his life. Some white conservatives regarded it as a witch-hunt. Some black people considered it as something that allowed apartheid's enforcers quite literally to get away with murder. Tutu saw it as a process of confession and cleansing that would help to heal the country's wounds. 5

Hundreds of public hearings were held throughout the country. Oppressors, torturers, victims and bereaved recalled the horrors of apartheid, and many sought or gave forgiveness. Tutu sometimes wept as he helped witnesses through the process. At other times, he scolded them. He criticised FW de Klerk for the inadequacies of his testimony. He begged his close friend, Winnie Mandela, to admit that her gang of youths committed some brutal crimes. Finally, and very reluctantly, she did so. 10

The Commission was judged to have been partly successful. 15

Source 2: From Margaret Thatcher, Southern Africa: The Way Ahead – Britain's View, 23 October 1989. This statement was British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's response to opinions voiced by Commonwealth leaders in a recent meeting. Here Mrs Thatcher outlines her view of the political and economic situation in South Africa.

Britain agrees with the rest of the Commonwealth in utterly condemning apartheid and wishing to see its total abolition.

However, Britain believes that the Commonwealth should concentrate on encouraging change rather than on further punishment. Whatever their intention, sanctions have the effect of punishing the people. Sanctions are hardest on the poorest and weakest members of South Africa's black population. 20

South Africa needs economic growth to provide a decent standard of living for its people. Sanctions on investment deliberately deprive South Africa of access to the funds which it needs to grow its economy. Sanctions contribute to poverty and misery in South Africa, whereas Britain's efforts are directed to helping relieve poverty and misery throughout Africa as a whole. 25

Britain believes that the political effect of sanctions is to make the South African government resist change rather than to encourage change. There seems to be a clear link between the strength of extreme right-wing parties in South Africa that are utterly opposed to change and the imposition of additional sanctions by the US Congress and the Commonwealth. 30

Britain wants to see the Commonwealth and the international community support peaceful change and enable South Africa to develop a strong economy. 35
